

David Albert, “On the Emergence of Space and Time”

Abstract: It is argued that the world may not need to be thought of as having any fundamental, pre-dynamical, geometrical structure. This turns out to shed useful light on the difference between classical physics and quantum mechanics. It also suggests novel directions in which a physics of the future might conceivably evolve.