

Constructor Theory

By Chiara Marletto

Constructor Theory is a new physical theory, where laws are expressed in terms of statements about possible and impossible tasks. This is a sharp departure from the traditional conception of fundamental physics, where everything is expressed as initial conditions and laws of motion. I shall explore applications of this new mode of explanation to quantum information theory, with particular reference to arguments in favour of quantum gravity.